1. A new Bulgarian military Polyclinic has been established directly under the Ministry of War. In this respect it differs from the Central Military Hospital in Sofia, which comes under the Army General Staff.
2. The Polyclinic is housed in a large building near the Sofia University Medical Faculty. There is a reception center and dressing station for the following branches of medicine (each branch has its own center): Surgery; Internal Pathology; Ophthalmology; Ear, Nose and Throat; Venereal Diseases; Dermatology; Dentistry; Nervous Illnesses; X-Ray Department.
3. The various branches of the Polyclinic have 20 beds at their disposal in the Central Military Hospital for any cases of special interest.
4. The medical director of the Polyclinic is a certain Dr. Stoyanov, who arrived from Russia.
5. Dr. Tachev is head of the Internal Pathology Section. He is a doctor and a former member of the University Medical Faculty.
6. the Military Polyclinic centers resemble mere village dressing stations, and lack the personnel and equipment necessary for efficiency. The War Office is said to spend, and to have spent, very large sums on their organization, but the importation of the necessary medical equipment has so far proved impossible.
7. The Polyclinic doctors object to military discipline and to the wearing of uniform; this has unfavorably influenced recruiting for the Polyclinic, with the result that the personnel is poor, and the general organization is undeveloped.
8. The Central Military Hospital has 250 beds, and good equipment, instruments and staff.
